

Abstract

A Window keyboard comprises a keyboard body having a single-chip microprocessor or ASIC therein and three function key blocks thereon. The three function key blocks include a File & Clipboard block, an Office block and an Application-setting block. Those blocks are electrically connected to the single-chip microprocessor and each has a plurality function key, wherein each function key generates a composite-key code for user to execute specific functions.